

Post Closing Tips for Homebuyers from a Title Perspective

As a homebuyer, almost all interaction with the escrow and title company is prior to closing.

But what about post closing?

Here are some tips on what you as a homebuyer should look out for and do post closing.

Keep copies of your closing documents.

I'm sure this one sounds obvious, and yet, buyers are constantly losing, misplacing or throwing out their closing documents. In most cases, you will need a copy of your closing disclosure when you file your taxes. Having the ability to check and review the loan information that you agreed to could also come in handy.

Keep the Owner's Title Insurance Policy (and remember where you put it).

The Owner's Title Insurance Policy is your protection and may prove fundamental when trying to sell or refinance your property. A copy of it will be mailed to you per the instructions you provide to us and it is important to store away in a safe place as soon as you receive it. If you prefer to have a digital copy, we would be happy to send it via email if you provide us with your email address.

Look at your real estate property tax bills (if being escrowed or not).

Make sure that any exemptions (Homestead, Senior Citizen, etc.) are reflected on the bill. Even if a Homestead is filed with the deed, the tax office may fail to apply the proper credits or exemptions.

If you have waived the escrow account and are responsible for paying your property taxes directly, make sure you know when the property tax bills are due.

Just because you did not receive a bill does not excuse you from paying the taxes. Almost all jurisdictions allow you to view and pay the bill online.

If your taxes are being escrowed, make sure the lender pays the bill.

This is especially important to check for the first tax bill after your purchase. Typically, you can view escrow payments on the mortgage lender's website, or you can call the mortgage lender's automated number.

If you purchased multiple lots, ensure all real estate property tax bills are being paid.

This has been a common issue so it is advised that you do your own due diligence to ensure the payment of all tax bills have been made.

There are many things you as a homebuyer should look out for and do post closing. Progressive Title will continue to be a resource for you moving forward. Please call your Sales Representative with any questions that may arise.
